Schools promoting mental and physical health

Creating a positive school climate and a sense of belonging to the school can influence pupils’ academic achievements and prevent school dropouts or bullying. This requires a shift to a whole-school, systemic approach to support the well-being of both pupils and teachers. While school culture is important for the well-being and mental health of teachers, attention to social and resilience competencies and stress management strategies can also provide support. The importance of supporting teachers’ well-being was also emphasised in the latest survey results.

Schools must also take active measures to shape positive attitudes towards different sexual identities and to create schools free of violence to protect vulnerable groups like LGBTI+ youth. Moreover, teachers can help pupils to manage their concerns about global challenges such as the climate crisis, technological changes and disinformation.

To enhance awareness of healthy and sustainable food systems, teachers can employ fun, creative activities in their classrooms. Discover examples and awarded school initiatives to promote pupils’ physical and mental health.
